Some people/other people say that the clinical benefits of the new drugs for treating Alzheimer's disease are only moderate at best and the safety risks are significant. There needs to be more studies to ensure seniors are being effectively and safely served.

Some people/other people say that these new drugs offer real hope in the battle against Alzheimer's -- giving those with Alzheimer's more time with their loved ones and a better quality of life. Some people/other people say that the clinical benefits of the new drugs for treating Alzheimer's disease are only moderate at best and the safety risks are significant. There needs to be more studies to ensure seniors are being effectively and safely served.

Some people/other people say that these new drugs offer real hope in the battle against Alzheimer's -- giving those with Alzheimer's more time with their loved ones and a better quality of life. Q18. {SSC} Now let me read you two opinions on whether or not Medicare should cover FDA-approved drugs for the treatment of Alzheimer's disease. Which of the following is closer to your opinion? [ROTATE STATEMENTS 1-2, 2-1]

Some people/other people say that the clinical benefits of the new drugs for treating Alzheimer's disease are only moderate at best and the safety risks are significant. There needs to be more studies to ensure seniors are being effectively and safely served.

Some people/other people say that these new drugs offer real hope in the battle against Alzheimer's -- giving those with Alzheimer's more time with their loved ones and a better quality of life. We should leave the decision on whether to use the drugs to patients, their families, and their doctors.

Some people/other people say that the clinical benefits of the new drugs for treating Alzheimer's disease are only moderate at best and the safety risks are significant. There needs to be more studies to ensure seniors are being effectively and safely served.

Some people/other people say that Medicare should not be telling FDA scientists how to do their job and they shouldn't be playing gatekeeper to FDA-approved medications that can help patients -- it's FDA's job to approve drugs and it's Medicare's job to cover the approved drugs.
